From THE CENTENNIAL HISTORY OF OREGON 1811-1912

“STEVE F. RICHARDSON, who is living retired in the La Grande, was the pioneer in the export lumber trade in his district, having been connected with that business in Oregon since 1883. He served his native State of Maine as a member of its legislature in 1873, and his adopted State of Oregon in the same capacity in 1907. By his active and successful business career in the La Grande District he did valuable service in developing its resources and has long been regarded as one of its most influential citizens.

He was born in Hartland, Somerset County, Maine on February 23, 1842, the son of Bryant and Rachel (Goodwin) Richardson, both natives of the same place. The grandfather, Joel Richardson, was a native of England and immigrated to the New World, establishing his home in America. The Goodwins were of Scotch ancestry and were successful and respected in Maine, where the family settled on coming to this country. The Richardson Family in Maine was engaged in the lumber industry and the subject of this review received a thorough training in that line of business.

He pursued his education in the schools of his native state and after leaving aside his text books embarked in lumbering. After remaining in his native state for some time he removed to Wisconsin and was there engaged in lumbering for a period of seven years. In the fall of 1883 he came to Oregon and settled in the Grande Ronde valley, entering that section on the back of an Indian pony. He spent some time looking over the land in that neighborhood for opportunities in his business, having associated with him some eastern capitalists.

Finding what he readily perceived was an excellent chance to launch a good business, he made a favorable report to his principals and with sufficient capital at his disposition the river was cleaned so that logs might be floated on its waters. Wing and flood dams were built and everything placed in readiness for logging operations. A sawmill was also built under Mr. Richardson's supervision at Stump Town, now known as Perry, and the business which was successfully launched was continued by Mr. Richardson until 1900, when he partially retired, although still retaining an interest in some of the mills.

He has valuable real-estate holdings in addition to his lumber interests, owning a farm of Two Hundred and Eighty-five acres four miles east of Island City and Ten acres of orchard land one mile from La Grande. He also has lumber interests in the state of Idaho.

On May 21, 1870, Mr. Richardson was united in marriage to Miss Lilla Burrell, of Somerset County, Maine, a daughter of George and Olive (Tupper) Burrell, natives of the same locality. The father was a successful agriculturist, following that occupation during his lifetime.

Mr. Richardson has always taken an active interest in politics and being an influential and representative citizen. He is widely known in the state of Oregon, being well acquainted in the La Grande district in Union County, where he is respected by all who know him and held in high esteem by a large number of his business, political and social friends. He is possessed of much more than ordinary business ability and his long career in the logging industry and lumber trade has been a very successful one.”
