"He was educated in his native place, married there and began a family. He arrived in Boston with his wife and their 2 young children on June 9, 1848 and worked in the woolen mills of Cherry Valley, Saugus, and Lawrence, Massachusetts for the next 12 years."

When he first came to Maine from Lawrence, where he was living with his family in the 1860 Census, Mr. Linn operated an existing woolen mill with David Campbell in Dexter (this mill was built in 1846 where Fay-Scott's was located) until 1864 when Linn sold out his share to Campbell.

"He removed to Hartland about 1862 where he found the conditions quite suitable to operate his own woolen mill he would run as the Linn Woolen Mill for the next several decades. Mr. Linn also eventually purchased and operated the grist mill which was located next to the woolen mill. The Civil War provided an opportunity for the new woolen mill to gather a lucrative contract to produce 'Union Blue' wool and the mill prospered greatly."

Mr. Linn was very active in town politics and the advancement of Hartland's future prosperity through support of the railroad coming to Hartland, the creation of its first bank and a town hall building committee. Linn was a large land owner and had many business interests including a granite quarry, grist mill and was one of the original founders of The Wild Goose Club at Castle Harmony.

Following his death, the mill operations were then handled by his children and son-in-law Henry Fuller under the careful watch of his estate trustee, Greenville J. Shaw. The newly renamed Linn Manufacturing Company, built a new mill on the lower side of the bridge on Main Street in 1892 replacing the remains of the John Shaw & Son Tannery and several other small business buildings.

By 1915, following the deaths of his son Thomas and his son-in-law Henry Fuller, the mill had gone bankrupt and was sold to the American Woolen Company which operated until it went bankrupt in 1932. Eventually, the mills would become the site for the Hartland Tanning Company.

Grace Wilson Linn was a huge advocate of the Methodist Church and a large benefactor for the church to be built. In late 1883, her relentless efforts were rewarded with the building of a brand new church, built by Amasa J. Moor. Sadly, soon after the church opened she passed away and the first funeral service held at the new church was hers. Later that year, the church was dedicated in her honor and still bears the name Grace Linn Memorial Methodist Church.

"He was educated in the public schools of Lawrence, Massachusetts, whither the family moved when he was a young child, and he also attended an Episcopalian school at Portland, Maine. He went into the mills to work at Lawrence when very young, and learned the business of textile manufacturing from bottom to top. He engaged in manufacturing on his own account, and at the present time is treasurer of the Linn Manufacturing Company, of Hartland, Maine, and is an owner in the Fuller-Osborne Manufacturing Company of the same town.

He has taken a leading position among the manufacturers of his section and has done much to make the town of Hartland a busy industrial center. He is prominent in political and social life as well as in business. He is an active and influential Republican, has been chosen often as delegate to nominating conventions of his party and is chairman of the Hartland Town Committee.

He is a member of Corinthian Lodge of Free Masons, Hartland; of Ira Berry Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, Pittsfield; of the Commandery Knights Templar, of Skowhegan; of the Maine Consistory, Portland; of Kora Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Lewiston, and he is a Thirtysecond Degree Mason. He is a member also of the Hartland Lodge of Odd Fellows; the Pittsfield Encampment and the Waterville Canton; the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Waterville. He is a member of the Grace Linn Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church of Hartland.”

He was one of the three Linn heirs who continued operating his father's Linn Woolen Mill business following his death in 1889 along with his brother-in-law, Henry Clay Fuller. Thomas' death in 1914 (following Henry's death in 1903) coincides with the eventual bankruptcy of the mill which was taken over by the American Woolen Mill Company the following year.
